The idea of the organization was to furnish a home and meeting place for republicans at the capital city and is massive rather than imposing, and a specta- laid in red mortar and decorated with mouldwas fashioned to some extent after the model of the Union league clubs, which exist in other cities. This movement met with such cordial support that a permanent organization was effected, Gen. Edward F. Beale being elected president. The league was incorporated under the laws of the District November 11th. In order to make the organization a escial as well as a political center a large residence on Thomas circle was secured and fitted up as a club house. During the past campaign the league performed im-portant duties. A number of the members entered actively into the campaign. The club rooms were made the headquarters of the republican congressional committee, and at the close of the campaign the national committee selected the league building as their headquarters. The president of the league, Gen. Beale, is well known in this District. He was the Mexican war, and upon his resignation was appointed superintendent of Indian affairs for New Mexico and California, which position he resigned in 1854. He was commissioned as brigadier-general, and placed in command of the troops engaged in the Indian war in California, which he brought to a conclusion.

HIS LAST DAY AS PRESIDENT. Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Attend Church

Yesterday at the White House was quiet and uneventful. The only indication of coming events was the great throng of strangers on the outside who sought admission. Although it was raining the carriage drove up to the front until somebody wants to eat them. An 18-foot door as usual on Sabbath morning, and Mr. French range is in place, and there everything Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Folsom shortly afterward came out and started for the First Presbyterian church, on 41/2 street, where they have attended since their residence in this city. It was the last time that they were to occupy the familiar pew, and what-ever might have been the thoughts of the distinguished party as they sat through the service there was nothing to indicate in their appearance that the occa-sion had more than ordinary interest. The large church was crowded with people, many of whom were visitors to the city who had come there for the purpose of getting a glimpse of the the retiring President and his wife. The services were as usual, and no reference was made to the occasion which was of deep interest both to the members of the congregation' and Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Sunderland, preached from the text, "For brethren you have been called into liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion of the flesh," It was a plea for Sabbath observance urged with the force and eloquence which Dr. Sunderland possesses to such a marked degree. Upon the conclusion of the services Mr. gree. Upon the conclusion of the services Mr. Cleveland and ladies retired quickly from the Cleveland and ladies retired quickly from the church, and passing through the immense crowd gathered in front of the church, were driven to the White House. After dinner Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland were driven to the house of Secretary Fairchild, where they will remain until their departure for New York, which will be on Wednesday. Mrs. Folsom went to the residence of Postmaster-General Lickinson, whose guests she will be until she joins Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland on their trip to New York.

Saturday was a busy day at the White House, both for Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland. The former was busy with his official duties and the latter was busy with his official duties and the latter with completing her packing and signing auto-graphs. Mrs. Cleveland attended Leo Wheat's

RETROSPECT.

Nine years ago in February we first asked the patronge of the Washington public in a store on Market Space 25x 100 feet. To day we have a large five-story building containing over 50,000 feet of selling space. Then we employed about fifty assistants, to-day we have about 350. Then we had one delivery wagon; to-day we have seven.

Your patronage has been the lever with which the store has been raised to its present position. The cardinal principles upon which we established our business, and upon which it has prospered, are: "Equity, liberality, one price, best intrinsic values and money refunded to all dissatisfied purchasers"-and these principles will be conscientiously adhered to in the future.

Standing upon the threshold of our tenth business year, more ripe in experience and better acquainted with your diversified requirements in our line of trade, we see even greater achievements in the future, and no efforts will be spared by us to make the next nine years bear equally as good, if not better fruit than the nine preceding years.

Strangers in the city are cordially invited to visit our establishment. Roam through it, ask questions, and make vourselves generally at home. It is a rule of the house not to urge customers to buy, so you will not be importuned. For the benefit of strangers we add that our stock comprises general Dry Goods, Notions, Fancy Articles, etc., and no lower prices for equal qualities prevail anywhere—in this, or any city.

We have opened the greater portion of our spring stock especially for this occasion, and strangers wishing to purchase a new dress, or a "souvenir" of their visit to Washington, are offered ample opportunity to satisfy their desires in this line at our establishment.

Very Respectfully,

PORTER AND MANAGING EDITOR.

Elijah Walker Halford, President Harrison's private secretary, was born in Nottingham, England, but came to America with his parents when quite young. They first went to Cincinnati, but the elder Halford, who was a tailor by trade, did not find things to his liking there and removed to Hamilton. He was a deeply religious man of the Wesleyan Methodist per-

An incident in Halford's life which illustrates his secretive power, which is essentially necessary in a private secretary, is found in the way in which he was married. His wife was teaching music in a female seminary of the Methodist persuasion in Indianapolis when she attracted the attention of Mr. Halford, and a warm attachment sprung up between them. Miss Fitzgerald's parents removed to Franklin, Ind., and subsequently to Elgin, Ill., but septimes the mother of General Washington.

office. He didn't see his bride for six weeks. By that time he had made arrangements for her reception, and he went to her home in Elgin to fetch her. There he revealed their relations to her parents and took his wife to her new home. But one or two of his most intimate friends had any idea that he was married until he brought his wife to Indianapolis.

HIS NEW DRESS SUIT.

Halford has been in one respect like Attorney-General Garland—he has always had an antipathy to a dress coat. He considered that the double-breasted prince albert frock was good enough dress for him and below the six weeks.
